

Riverside Outbuilding, Archaeology

The landscape around the main house at Riverside has changed dramatically over time. The main house was surrounded by many different structures throughout its history. All of them had important roles in the operation of the household and farm at Riverside. These structures were frequently repaired, replaced, and dismantled according to the needs of the farm. Archaeology is being used to locate and interpret these structures.

